INTRAVENOUS THERAPY

The INTRAVENOUS THERAPY is the process of infusing a fluid substance directly into the vein for therapeutic treatment. This method is usually used to rehydrate, correct electrolyte imbalances and perform medication and blood transfusions. The treatment includes the following:

1. Myer's Push – This treatment, pioneered by the late Dr. John Myers, M.D., involves a slow Intravenous (IV) push or slow infusion directly into the bloodstream to achieve concentration of nutrients of multi-vitamins. This is administered to alleviate chronic symptoms like inflammation, muscle pain, fatigue and stress. This also helps increase immune support, alleviate anxiety, migraines and muscle cramps.
2. Immune Therapy – This is one of the most sought after (IV) therapeutics to increase immune system, prevent flu and other infectious diseases, speedy recovery and promote overall wellness -- a quick boost for our busy lives.

3. Mega C – High-dose Vitamin C which is given IV infusion can reach much higher levels in the blood than when orally taken. This has been proven as a treatment for cancer patients since the 1970s. It may slow the growth and spread of prostate, pancreatic, liver, colon and other types of cancer cells.
4. Acne Therapy – This involves addressing the cause of the acne while also working on aesthetic treatments to clear up the blemishes to achieve optimal skin health. The medical team customizes the treatment methods for each patient's specific skin type, acne condition and lifestyle. The treatment plan may consist of: skin treatment, nutritional supplements, formulating a diet that will help prevent inflammation.

The INTRAVENOUS THERAPY is the fastest way to infuse the body with nutrition. The vitamins needed are directed straight to the bloodstream, bypassing the digestive process, thus leading to more efficient nutritional results. Some of the benefits of this treatment are:
